Headquartered near Denver, ToolKing.com is an Internet Retailer 500 company, offering tools, hardware, home-improvement items, outdoor goods, and more across multiple e-commerce channels. It sells more than 120,000 products online. To capitalize on every advertising opportunity, ToolKing.com began using Google Product Listing Ads (PLAs) on Google Shopping.

Google Shopping and PLAs

ToolKing.com had little previous experience with PLAs. Aided by partner ChannelAdvisor, the company embraced the ad format in 2012 as a crucial e-commerce tool. “We have been using Google since the Froogle days. Although we were aware of PLAs, we did not make them a priority until ChannelAdvisor made it clear that they’d be the only way to go on Google Shopping,” says Ben Skigen, ToolKing.com e-commerce director. “We quickly realized that the transition to Google Shopping was a great opportunity for us,” Skigen adds.

ToolKing.com’s data feed to Google Shopping includes all of its products. After testing, the company lowered many PLA bids, so that non-performing items appear low in search-query results or don’t appear at all. Using ChannelAdvisor technology, ToolKing.com assigns products to various PLA target groups, based on pricing, availability, and other factors. It optimizes bids for each target group to drive additional traffic.

“ChannelAdvisor made it easy for us to get 100 percent of our catalog listed in Google Shopping,” Skigen says. “Given the results we’ve seen so far, we’re not shy about investing more into PLAs. Looking ahead, we will continue developing our bidding algorithms to maximize our ROI.”

Driving higher traffic and conversions

“We are seeing amazing results with Google Shopping, and PLAs are already becoming our highest-priority marketing channel,” Skigen says. “As we’ve figured out and refined our bidding strategy, we’ve observed an increase in revenue and a decrease in cost per conversion. We like that.”

ToolKing.com’s traffic and conversion rates both have risen more than 50 percent. The company also has reinvigorated sales of thousands of
