January 2, 2024 will be the first workday in 2024.

- 1. Q. What does observing the “special release days” on December 27, 28, 29, 2023 mean?

A. It means that most benefit-based members of the campus community, including LIGO, Palomar, and Owens Valley, may take those days off, with pay, without having to use vacation or personal holiday time.
- 2. Q. Does JPL observe the campus special release days?

A. No. JPL does not observe special release days. JPL will observe a normal Regular Day Off (RDO) day on December 29, 2023.
- 3. Q. Will the same policy that applies to Caltech’s regular holidays apply to the special release days?

A. Although there are many similarities, the special release days will be treated somewhat differently than regularly observed holidays. The information provided in these FAQs covers most of those differences.
- 4. Q. What happens if my supervisor schedules me to work on one or more of the special release days?

A. If you are asked to work on a special release day, you will be granted another day off with pay on or before February 29, 2024.
- 5. Q. What if a special release day falls on my regular day off?

A. Similar to the way regular holidays are handled, you will be provided an alternative day off, with pay, on or before February 29, 2024.
- 6. Q. What happens if schedules make it impossible to grant the alternative day off?

A. Although we anticipate that in most cases it will be possible to grant an alternative day off, with pay, on or before February 29, 2024, there may be some cases where that does not happen. In those cases, you will be paid holiday pay equivalent to your regular work schedule and straight time for the first eight hours worked on a special release day. For any hours you work in excess of eight, you will be paid premium time as defined by Caltech policy.
