• Lieutenant Colonel Alexander Vindman, a Ukraine expert on the National Security Council:

"It is improper for the President of the United States to demand a foreign government investigate a U.S. citizen and political opponent… This would undoubtedly result in Ukraine losing bipartisan support, undermine U.S. national security, and advance Russia's strategic objectives in the region. I want to emphasize to the Committee that when I reported my concerns - on July 10, relating to Ambassador Sondland, and on July 25, relating to the President - I did so out of a sense of duty. I privately reported my concerns, in official channels, to the proper authorities in the chain of command. My intent was to raise these concerns because they had significant national security implications for our country."

It was — it was much more alarming; the White House meeting was one thing, security assistance was much more alarming."
